LOGLINE

On The Divide follows the story of three Latinx people living in McAllen, Texas who, despite their views, are connected by the most unexpected of places: the last abortion clinic on the U.S./Mexico border. As threats to the clinic and their personal safety mount, these three are forced to make decisions they never could have imagined. (336 characters)

SYNOPSIS

McAllen, Texas is home to Whole Woman's Health — the last abortion clinic in the US/Mexico border. Mercedes, a tattooed Latina woman in her thirties who used to be involved in gangs, is now part of the pro-life Church movement, embracing the support from the Christian pregnancy center located next door to the clinic. Denisse, a young mother of four, volunteers at Whole Woman's Health of McAllen and helps guide women into the clinic, providing much-needed comfort and assistance. Protecting the entryway into the clinic is Rey, a Latino security guard in his late sixties who is fervent in his religious beliefs, but also deeply understands the plight of the women who arrive at the abortion clinic.

Their life decisions intertwine at this abortion clinic, as they grapple with how their devotion informs their role in fighting for or against abortion rights. Filmed over seven years, the documentary chronicles this community during the political climate of the Trump administration, the storytelling bolstered by an empathetic lens and an authentic concern for spotlighting reproductive rights as a fraught national issue. Throughout On the Divide, filmmakers Maya Cueva and Leah Galant expertly bring the audience into the rising tensions—and humanity—at the center of this contentious issue.

On the Divide is a Fishbowl Films production in association with Giving Voice Films, Willa Productions, Latino Public Broadcasting, and a co-production of POV. The documentary is directed by Maya Cueva and Leah Galant. The producers are Diane Becker, Melanie Miller, Amanda Spain and Elizabeth Woodward, and the editor is Berenice Chávez. Erika Dilday, Justine Nagan and Chris White are the executive producers for POV. Sandie Viquez Pedlow is the executive producer for Latino Public Broadcasting. The original song, "Aquí No Hay Pena," performed by multi Grammy nominated singer and songwriter Ximena Sariñana, inspired by Danielle López and her family López-Rodríguez-Barrientos' ancestral indigenous cantor.

INSPIRATION

McAllen, Texas, located at the southern tip of the state within the Rio Grande Valley, is the largest city in Hidalgo County. A true bi-national city, it is home to the Ursula Detention Center which is at the center of the migrant children crisis, and the Whole Woman's Health of McAllen — the last abortion clinic on the US/Mexico border. Since there is only one abortion clinic in the entire Rio Grande Valley, if this clinic were to close, undocumented people would have to travel over 250 miles to get to the nearest clinic and risk deportation crossing these border checkpoints along the way. In ON THE DIVIDE, filmmakers Maya Cueva and Leah Galant, focus on individual health care in the region and the cultural/religious/political wars over this issue.

As female directors, one of whom is Latina, we are closely connected to the issues of reproductive healthcare and Latinx identity. We also worked closely with organizers and people from the area of McAllen and the Rio Grande Valley to make sure the community was represented in the storytelling. Our film team is composed of mostly women of diverse backgrounds, including our associate producer and field producer who are from McAllen, Texas.

We [Maya and Leah] met at Ithaca College where we made our short film about a traveling abortion doctor in Texas called THE PROVIDER (SXSW 2016). While in production on that film, we attended a rally in the Rio Grande Valley for reproductive healthcare and realized there was only one clinic in the entire region. After that event in 2014, we were connected to another traveling abortion doctor Dr. Bhavik Kumar who worked at the Whole Woman's Health of McAllen in Texas. He introduced us to clinic workers, community members and organizers in the Rio Grande Valley, and we were drawn to the stories of people who are often misrepresented and neglected in the mainstream news coverage.

It became clear we needed to keep telling the complicated stories from people in this border region. Through the trust we built over the last few years, we were introduced to the tight knit community of McAllen and eventually our three characters. For the past seven years, we have been filming ON THE DIVIDE in a small border town that the media paints as a “war zone” surrounding access to reproductive healthcare and immigrant rights. Despite the often-reductive media representation, McAllen is a community filled with organizers, artists, and those deeply rooted in tradition, religion, and family. Some religious viewpoints in the area leaves very little room for nuanced views on abortion or empathy for people whose views fall somewhere in between.

Despite the majority anti-abortion sentiments of this area, all of our characters in ON THE DIVIDE share nuanced perspectives on abortion regardless of their political position. We wanted to share the stories of people who might be the unlikely faces behind the issue of reproductive healthcare -- such as Rey, a 67 year old Latino man who is the security guard at the clinic. Our characters share many cultural similarities, and their stories create space for connection and dialogue as opposed to division. Their stories demonstrate how people who once held rigid beliefs can change and what choice and survival really looks like for those in the heart of the battle surrounding reproductive rights.

MCALLEN PREGNANCY CENTER

McAllen Pregnancy Center, founded by Yolanda Chapa, is one of many crises pregnancy centers (CPCs) throughout Texas. CPCs are anti-abortion, and their mission is to stop patients from having abortions. They often convince women like Mercedes to not have an abortion by spreading harmful misinformation. Yolanda, like many owners of crisis pregnancy centers, is not a licensed medical doctor.

WOMEN'S HEALTH CARE IN TEXAS FACT SHEET

As of February 2022

- There are 24 clinics in Texas providing abortions, home to about 29.53 million people.
<https://fundtexaschoice.org/ftc-need-help/texas-abortion-clinic-map/>
<https://www.census.gov/newsroom/press-releases/2021/2021-population-estimates.html>
- As of January 2022, there is still only one abortion clinic in the Rio Grande Valley, which is located on the border of Texas/Mexico in McAllen, Texas.
- In 2013, a bill known as House Bill 2 effectively shut down most abortion clinics in Texas, but after the bill was struck down by the Supreme Court, many clinics in Texas could not reopen. Whole Woman's Health of McAllen was a plaintiff in this case, Whole Woman's Health vs. Hellerstedt. <https://www.oyez.org/cases/2015/15-274>
- In 2014, the McAllen WWH clinic shut its doors but reopened after a federal judge ruling allowed it to reopen. This is because it was the only abortion clinic offering services in the Rio Grande Valley.

- Rosie's Law, named after Rosie Jimenez, aims to provide public and private health insurance coverage of abortion care in Texas which was introduced to the Texas legislature in 2021.
- The Biden administration's May 2021 budget plan did not include the Hyde Amendment.
- In May 2021, Texas' Governor Greg Abbott signed the "heartbeat bill" into law that could ban abortions at six weeks and "would let nearly anyone — including people with no connection to the doctor or the woman — sue abortion providers, and those who help others get an abortion in violation of the proposed law. People who support abortion funds and clinics could also be hit with lawsuits, and lawyers warn those sued would not be able to recover some of the money they spent on their legal defense." The law came into effect on September 1, 2021.

THE FILMMAKING TEAM

Maya Cueva, Director and Sound Recordist

Maya is a Latina award-winning director and producer with a background in documentary, radio, and audio producing. She is a Netflix Nonfiction Director and Producer fellow and was recently listed on DOC NYC's "40 Under 40 Filmmakers" co-presented by HBO Documentary Films. Maya's work has been featured on The New Yorker, NPR's "All Things Considered," "Latino USA," The Atlantic, Teen Vogue, and National Geographic. She received a student Emmy for her short film THE PROVIDER and her feature film, ON THE DIVIDE, premiered in the documentary competition at Tribeca Film Festival in 2021. Her most recent short documentary ALE LIBRE was acquired by The New Yorker and was selected to screen at several Oscar qualifying festivals, including Big Sky Documentary Festival, Hot Docs, Aspen Film Festival, and SFFILM. Maya's feature documentary ON THE DIVIDE will be broadcast on POV on PBS in Spring 2022.

Director's Statement:

As a mixed Latinx filmmaker, ON THE DIVIDE was an incredibly important film for me to make because of my personal connection to the story and topic and understanding the complexity around abortion and choice in the Latinx community. Although I am not from the border region, I felt connected to our participants'--Rey, Mercedes, and Denisse stories and felt like they could be family members of mine. I felt that it was important to share the unlikely faces behind the issue surrounding reproductive healthcare and what it means to have to grapple with survival and choice when options are limited. Rarely do we see Latinx voices being centered in the battle surrounding reproductive healthcare, and it was important for me to take an intimate look into their lives to show how the issue is not as black and white as it might appear as well as show how choice is ultimately necessary for survival, bodily autonomy, and agency.

Leah Galant, Director and Director of Photography

Leah Galant is a Jewish filmmaker and Fulbright Scholar based in New York whose storytelling focuses on unexpected narratives often through the lens of womxn. In 2021 she was recognized as one of DOC NYC's 40 under 40. While at Ithaca College in 2015 she was named one of Variety's "110 Students to Watch in Film and Media" for her work on THE PROVIDER (SXSW 2016, Student Emmy Award) and BEYOND THE WALL. She was a Sundance Ignite and Jacob Burns Fellow where she created DEATH METAL GRANDMA (SXSW 2018) about a 97-year-old Holocaust survivor Inge Ginsberg who sings death metal which won "Best Documentary" at the American Pavilion at Cannes Film Festival and is a NY Times Op Doc. Leah is a member of Meerkat Media worker-cooperative film production company in Sunset Park NY. Leah serves as the Director and Director of Photography on her feature debut, ON THE DIVIDE.

Galant's Director's Statement:

We decided to film ON THE DIVIDE in an intimate verité style in order to focus on the real human stories behind a complicated and polarizing issue. As the cinematographer, I wanted the lens to feel as close as an extension to Maya and me as possible and it was important for us to create a safe space for the protagonists to share. By allowing our participants to tell their own stories we hope to create dialogue across echo chambers and for people to understand what choice means if you are not provided many options.

Diane Becker, Producer

Diane is an Emmy nominated, Peabody Award winning producer and a graduate of the American Film Institute. She has produced Greg Barker's award-winning films alongside Passion Pictures and Motto Pictures including SERGIO (2009 Oscar shortlist), MANHUNT (2013 Emmy), and THE FINAL YEAR. Diane has also produced a slate of prestigious music films: WE ARE X, IF I LEAVE HERE TOMORROW, SID & JUDY, and the Emmy nominated TINA. Recent credits include: BELUSHI (Showtime), and docu-series such as FIVE CAME BACK (Netflix), TRIAL BY MEDIA (Netflix), and EQUAL (HBO Max). Diane and Melanie Miller are the co-founders of Fishbowl Films. INVENTING TOMORROW (POV) premiered at Sundance (2018) and won a Peabody Award (2019). They were awarded the 2020 Sundance Institute/Amazon Producer's Award for Non-Fiction for WHIRLYBIRD. The film is the International Documentary Association's ABC News Videosource Award winner for 2021. Their latest, NAVALNY, won the US Documentary Audience Award and the Festival Favorite at the 2022 Sundance Film Festival. Diane was a Sundance

A Q&A WITH MAYA CUEVA AND LEAH GALANT

Q: What is your film about?

MC & LG: Our is about three Latinx people who are unexpectedly connected to the last abortion clinic on the Texas/Mexico border. The film follows them throughout the course of four years as they navigate what choice means to them when they aren't afforded many options and are forced to make unimaginable decisions. As our three characters' lives intersect at the only abortion clinic in the Rio Grande Valley, they all are faced with threats to their safety and have to navigate choice as a means of survival.

Q: What inspired you to make this film?

MC: Leah and I first met in college, and it was there that we came across an article about a traveling abortion doctor. We had never heard of this type of profession before, and it was from there that we made our way to Texas and saw that only one abortion clinic remained in the Rio Grande Valley, on the border of Texas/Mexico in McAllen, Texas. After completing our short film, THE PROVIDER, which follows a traveling abortion doctor, we made our way back to the border and started what is now known as ON THE DIVIDE.

LG: During production on THE PROVIDER, we noticed the discourse around the abortion debate felt very polarizing and dialogue was lost within echo chambers. This inspired us to follow multidimensional nuanced characters whose stories had the power to expand the conversation. We were interested in telling the stories of people's lives as opposed to talking head experts.

Q. America is tackling the issues of gender inequality and racial/social injustice. In the process of making this documentary, were there any moments that resonated, shocked or surprised you?

LG: We were appalled by the sheer volume of anti-abortion legislation that was being pushed at the local, state and federal level. It was also shocking to realize that there was only one abortion clinic that serves the entire Rio Grande Valley, and that the nearest clinic was over 250 miles away.

MC: It wasn't until making this film that I really realized how much the lack of access to reproductive healthcare and immigration intersect. Although we didn't touch on this much in the film, the border region is heavily impacted by the militarization of the border, family separation and lack of access for healthcare in general. If the McAllen clinic were to close, undocumented people seeking abortion care would have to travel over 250 miles to get to the nearest clinic, which means they would risk deportation because of border checkpoints along the way.

Q. What do you want audiences to take away with them after they watch the film? Without revealing spoilers, what do you fear they will misinterpret?

MC: I want people to understand that the issue surrounding abortion is not a black and white issue. Many people fall in the gray area with how they might personally feel on the issue, but this should not take away from why choice and access to abortion is necessary. I also want people to understand that it's possible to be both religious and pro-choice. Oftentimes, white women are centered in the conversation around reproductive healthcare, when Black and Brown people are impacted the most and often deal with many more barriers to access than white women do. I think it's important that we focus on the people that will be directly impacted if access to choice is stripped away, and how through the journeys of our protagonists, we see how choice is necessary for survival. I think that people on either side of the issue might interpret all three of our characters as fixed in their views -- but they will be surprised by how complex Rey, Mercedes, and Denisse actually are.

LG: I want people to challenge preconceived notions on choice and abortion. I also want people to embrace complexity in individual decisions and what autonomy really means. Through the incredible stories of our three participants, we want to ignite a dialogue outside echo chambers as we approach one of the biggest threats to Roe v. Wade in over 48 years.

Q. For this film you've put together a creative team consisting of women and people of color. How have your experiences as women and one of color, impacted your approach to documentary filmmaking?

LG: Most of our crew is comprised of womxn and Latinx individuals. Maya and I intended to create a space within our film that is in direct contrast with how the white male dominated industry currently operates and that extends to who we collaborated with and how we approached the film. One of the biggest questions that we would ask community members is "What stories do you feel are not being told?" This helped guide our filmmaking approach while being conscious of how mainstream media has previously documented the region and ensured that we did not tell reductive narratives.

MC: As a Latina director, I strive to tell stories of underrepresented communities that aren't invisible -- they just haven't been seen in a 3-dimensional way. My background in audio influences my POV as a filmmaker, as I often incorporate radio techniques into my films or create films based off of the radio features I create. As a filmmaker, I feel compelled to highlight complex communities, organizers, and the exploration of my personal identity. I seek to shed light on stories that are often misrepresented or ignored by politicians and the mainstream media.

Q. What was the biggest challenge in making the film?

LG: The biggest challenge we faced was not being taken seriously as young women in the industry and lack of funding due to this. While we eventually had the incredible support of our producing team and funding partners, the first few years of production were met with rejection after rejection. While I do not want to glamorize our persistence despite challenges-I am grateful that Maya and I ended up being able to film with our participants for such a long time.

MC: The biggest challenge in making this film was not having enough resources or funding as young women directors or access to mental health services to help our participants and ourselves. This is a heavy topic, and our characters went through some traumatic experiences. It was also difficult at first to create a film about such a polarizing topic, but because of our approach to the film and always asking our characters what they thought was missing from mainstream news reports on the Rio Grande Valley and abortion, we were able to establish a trusting relationship.

Q. Hollywood is finally acknowledging they have a history of not supporting stories by female artists and people of color. What actions do you think need to be taken to make the film industry—narrative and documentary, more inclusive?

MC: To make the film industry more inclusive, we need to challenge the documentary space, which means we need to make sure there are anti-racist and anti-white supremacist practices on set as well as making sure that stories about Black and Brown communities are not told through the eyes of white men. We need to make space for Black and Brown women and non-binary individuals to be both behind the camera, involved in industry decision making, and afforded resources to make the films they want to make. It is exhausting that most of the film and documentary gatekeepers are white executives -- this needs to change. As documentary filmmakers, we also need to have space in our budgets that can support our characters so that we can create a reciprocal relationship between filmmakers and our subjects.

LG: White people in positions of power must step back and hand over the mic/platform and opportunities to femme filmmakers and femme filmmakers of color in meaningful creative roles as opposed to below the line positions. We need to stop categorizing femme filmmakers of color under coded language such as "emerging" directors since many of these filmmakers have been creating content for a long time. In the documentary space, we need to not just listen, but also respond to what filmmakers of color are requesting and restructure our industry to make it more equitable. We need to fund more filmmakers of color instead of the same established white male directors over and over. The financial resources should also foster programs for young people who are interested in film but may not have the same access to resources or film education.
